REPORT ON METROPOLIS BRITISH COLUMBIA ACTIVITIES

April 2008 - March 2009

THOUGHTS ON THE SECOND YEAR OF PHASE III OF MBC

Metropolis British Columbia is a policy research centre with goals in both research and the communication of knowledge. We are a key focal point for academics and community members to get together to exchange ideas, strengthen research and communicate research findings. Our stakeholders include familiar actors like policy-makers in federal, provincial, regional and municipal governments, and also people working on immigration- and diversity-related social processes in the non-governmental organisation sector. We measure ourselves by how well we produce research, and how well we communicate it. The purpose of this document is to give a sense of both our research output and the scope of our communication activities over the second year of Phase III of the Metropolis Project.

The difficulties we faced in establishing MBC as a functioning and funded research center are behind us. The center is now up and running and has shown great success in many areas over the past year thanks in large measure to the serious and sustained commitment on the part of our stakeholders.

During the past year, we have maintained our relationships with our major funders. Core funding is provided by a coalition of federal partners through SSHRC and amounts to $300,000 per year. Additional core funding is provided by the BC government through the Ministry of Advanced Education in the amount of $100,000 annually. Our large base of core funding greatly enhances our capacity to produce and disseminate knowledge relative to other similar research centers. We have also negotiated four funded graduate student research internships (annually) with MITACS/ACCELERATE BC. These have also expanded our research capacity, adding up to $60,000 annually to our research budget and, perhaps more importantly, deepen our relationships with partner organizations. The Asia Pacific Foundation matched funding on one research project of common interest, adding another $15,000 per year to our research budget. Finally, the Climate Justice Project has proposed co-funding a set of research projects with us, expanding our research envelope by as much as $30,000 over the next year.

RESEARCH OUTPUT

The researchers in the Metropolis British Columbia network produced even more written material during the second year than during the first year of Phase III. Collectively, we produced: 28 books, 115 chapters in (other) books, 246 papers in peer-reviewed journals, plus numerous other contributions. Our working paper series now includes 20 papers produced directly from our funded research projects. This research has substantially moved us forward in our understanding of immigration and ethnic diversity in Canada. The quality of researchers affiliated with MBC can also be seen in the remarkable statistics on their funding base. In the year of record alone, our researchers participated in a set of projects with a collective funding base of more than $8 million.

COMMUNICATION

Metropolis British Columbia held several different workshops this year, each of which was designed to connect scholars, policy-makers and line-workers with each other to better understand, better use and better create our research. We kicked off the (fiscal) year with a symposium on regionalisation and immigration, held in Kelowna in May 2008 and attended by nearly 80 interested stakeholders and academics. The focus of this event, the attraction and retention of immigrants in non-urban areas, motivated a wide variety of our stakeholders to attend, and energized the discussion in provincial and federal circles on this issue. Our annual research retreat, with attendance by more than 100 of our stakeholders, followed in September 2008, and the policy priorities developed here evolved into our 2 Calls For Proposals in Fall 2009. A more research-oriented workshop designed to connect qualitative researchers with policy-relevant questions and tools was held in September 2008 at UBC. In November 2008, we sponsored a symposium on the settlement and integration of refugees, held at Harbour Centre, which drew academics from across Canada, and participants from both the Federal and Provincial governments. Also in November, we held a symposium on Immigration and Health at UBC, which drew from a similar group of stakeholders. In May 2009, MBC held its first international conference, focused on the Economics of Immigration, with special focus on the children of immigrants and on temporary migration. While this event occurred after the period of this report, much of our activities over the year of record were dedicated to it.

RESEARCH AND DISSEMINATION PROJECTS

A primary activity at Metropolis British Columbia is the funding of new research and dissemination of research in the areas of immigration and ethnic diversity. The Fall 2008 Calls-For-Proposals for Research and Dissemination each generated a large number of proposals. Luckily, since our funding envelope is much larger than in previous years (due to our successful and ongoing external funding drive), we were able to fund over half of the proposed research and dissemination projects. The total funding committed for research in Year 2 was approximately $225,000. For the first time, we launched a separate Call for Dissemination Proposals, and allocated approximately $35,000 to four worthy dissemination projects. Therefore, MBC was able to support research and dissemination projects to a total of $260,000 in the period of record, which nearly equals the entire core budget provided to the Centre from SSHRC.

FOR THE FUTURE

Although we are very happy with the way MBC has progressed, we see some key areas on which to focus our attention and energy. In Year 1, we identified communication and outreach as a priority for our attention, and we identified the Justice, Policing, and Security Domain as a priority area for new research. In Year 2, we definitely strengthened our communication activities, both in number and scope, but there is still room for growth and greater effectiveness in Years 3 and beyond. In our dissemination CFP, we dedicated real resources to dissemination-related activities, and we will continue to pursue this line of growth. Our success in the Justice Domain has been weaker. It has been difficult to support research in the area of justice issues facing our diverse ethnic and immigrant communities because it is an area lightly traveled by BC scholars. Thus, a key goal in Years 3 and after is to continue building capacity in these important research questions. With these goals in mind, we look forward to the next year of hard work at Metropolis British Columbia.

ACTIVITIES ACROSS OUR RESEARCH DOMAINS

(contributed by the relevant Domain Leaders)

CITIZENSHIP AND SOCIAL, CULTURAL & CIVIC INTEGRATION

Oliver Schmidtke, University of Victoria

Over the past year, the Citizenship, Social Cultural and Civic Integration domain has continued its work on investigating the challenges of integration, citizenship and political participation. As evident in the list of publications much of the research undertaken by members of the domain took on a distinctly comparative perspective. Two thematic fields of research were of critical significance over the last twelve months: first, issues related to language acquisition and the role of language in promoting social and professional integration. Second, from various perspectives members of the domain have studied forms of political participation of immigrants and minorities in BC and other parts of the world. In particular with a view to these two issues the domain provided a highly productive context for debates and exchange beyond traditional disciplinary approaches.

Key initiatives

Policy workshop: Corresponding to the latter issue the domain co-organized a policy workshop on “Immigration and Integration Policies in a System of Multi-Level Governance” that brought together researchers from BC, Ontario, and Europe. The event took place at the University of Victoria on March 27, 2009 and focused on the urban and provincial context as an arena for policy formation and the inclusion of immigrant organizations into the process of political deliberation and decision making. Funding was also made available to invite graduate students from the University of British Columbia, Simon Fraser University and the University of Washington to the event.

Panel and paper presentations: Several of the domain’s affiliates organized special workshops/panels and/or presented papers at the Canadian Political Science Association, the Canadian Sociological Association, the Association of American Geographers, the National Metropolis Conference, and the International Metropolis Conference in Germany. In addition four members of the domain participated in a high-profile symposium on the professional and social integration of immigrants (the event took place at the Protestant Academy in Loccum Germany, in September 2008) that aimed at developing innovative policy approaches.

National and international cooperation

Last year also saw the launch of a new collaboration with the SHHRC-funded Strategic Knowledge Cluster “Canada-Europe Transatlantic Dialogue” (led by Joan DeBardleben, Carleton University). The nation-wide working group on migration and integration established by the Cluster has been a key partner in developing new initiatives (workshops and publication projects), instigating debates on the policy relevance of scientific research and promoting media outreach of researchers associated with the domain.

ECONOMIC AND LABOUR MARKET INTEGRATION

David Jacks, Simon Fraser University

The past year has been another fruitful one for the Economics and Labour Market Integration domain. The domain's work on documenting and explaining some of the most vital issues facing both BC and Canada with respect to immigration and diversity has continued apace and offers great prospects for the future.

A number of projects funded under earlier calls for research have yielded papers for inclusion in the Metropolis Working Paper series. First, Jane Friesen (SFU) and Brian Kraith (SFU) explore peer effects in local enclaves and find that attending an enclave school provides minor benefits to Chinese home language students and major costs to Punjabi home language students, suggesting a potential role for the human capital and cultural norms of peers. Fernando Mata (CIC) documents the extent to which the completion of post-secondary training in Canada or abroad may have facilitate workers' integration into the Canadian workforce while also detecting noticeable differences in labour market integration between those trained in Western versus non-Western educational systems. Dominique Gross (SFU) and Nicolas Schmitt (SFU) find that the inter-provincial adjustment mechanism through wage and labour mobility has been slowed down by the recent extension of the temporary-foreign-worker program to unskilled occupations. Finally, Philip Oreopoulos (UBC) uses resume-audits to provide evidence on the factors affecting interview request rates for immigrants versus non-immigrants, finding marked differences in English-named versus non-English-named applicants with similar education and experience. This last finding generated considerable public interest with Oreopoulos' research being featured in outlets such as the Vancouver Sun and The Globe and Mail.

As to future research output, in the fall 2008/spring 2009 grant cycles, Metropolis BC sponsored three projects which, although strictly falling in the economics domain, overlap with many of the concerns of other domains. Another notable event this year (just after the year of record) was a conference co-sponsored by Metropolis BC, the Province of British Columbia, the Centre for Research and Analysis of Migration, Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada, and Simon Fraser University. The organizational effort was spearheaded by Metropolis' co-director, Krishna Pendakur, and brought together leading scholars, representatives of municipal, provincial, and federal government as well as NGOs for a two-day research symposium on the economics of immigration. In sum, there were fully sixty-nine participants representing seven countries, laying the foundation for future collaboration.

HOUSING AND NEIGHBOURHOODS

Carlos Teixeira, University of British Columbia – Okanagan

Given the significant impact of immigration upon housing and neighbourhoods in Canadian cities, at this stage more research is needed regarding the housing experiences of immigrants, refugees, and visible minorities.

With respect to these themes/areas of research, Metropolis British Columbia accomplished the following:

a) M. B. C. Funded Research:

Anita Palepu: The Health & Housing in Transition Study: A Longitudinal Study of Health of Homelessness and Vulnerably Housed Adults in Vancouver, Toronto and Ottawa

b) Funded Research – “Homelessness Partnership Secretariat, Human Resources and Development Canada”

Project – “Housing and Homelessness” – Daniel Hiebert (P.I.). (C.I. – P. Kissoon, J. Francis and C. Teixeira).

c) Dissemination Project - Policy Research Symposium on the Regionalization of Immigrant Settlement in Canada: The Attraction-Retention of New Immigrants:

A policy research symposium on the regionalization of immigrant settlement in Canada took place on May 15, 2008 at UBCO. This symposium was videotaped for later distribution; it being recognized as important to disseminate, as widely as possible, the results of this symposium to NGOs and other workers in this field (Co-organizers – D. Hiebert and C. Teixeira).

d) Meetings:

Several of our research affiliates organized special workshops and/or presented papers at the Association of American Geographers (Las Vegas, April 2009), The National Metropolis Conference (Calgary 2009), the 13th Metropolis Conference (Bonn, Germany, October 2008), as well as at regional meetings (e.g., AMSSA Regional Meeting – Vernon, November 2008; “Brown Bag Series – Ottawa, 2008-2009; Housing and Neighbourhoods Priority Seminar/CMHC – Ottawa, February 2009) in Canada.

e) MBC Working Papers 2008/09:

#3 working papers

f) Other Publications - Special Issue of the "Canadian Geographer" on Immigrants/refugees and Housing (forthcoming)

2 articles (one by D. Hiebert and one by C. Teixeira).

JUSTICE, POLICING AND SECURITY

Catherine Dauvergne, University of British Columbia

The area of Justice Policing and Security is a fledgeling domain for Metropolis British Columbia (MBC), and so is an area where we hope to build strength in research, communication and community participation. However, since it is new to MBC, we are building from a base of near zero. Thus, our initial activity was focused on generating interest in the MBC research community to submit research proposals for our annual Calls for Proposals (CFP). A result of this was attracting five new academic researchers to the domain, as well as dozens of interested graduate students. This work has been moderately successful: over the first two CFPs, we funded three projects for research in the new domain, and more are in the works. Especially exciting was Ben Perrin's work on human trafficking, which attracted a large amount of media and community attention when its first working paper was released this year.

Our research output this year included two new books on Cambridge University Press and two working papers in our series. In terms of communication and community participation, we had a very successful symposium gathering graduate students and federal policy-makers together during May 2009. The objective here was to build a solid base of researchers, starting from the ground up. Clearly, our efforts here should be seen in the light of capacity-building for the new domain. It is from our point of view an experiment, and although the results have thus far been modest, we are hopeful that the domain will emerge as a strong partner in MBC's ongoing activities.

SETTLEMENT, INTEGRATION AND WELCOMING COMMUNITIES DOMAIN

Miu Chung Yan, University of British Columbia

In the last two years, the seven projects funded under this domain have all been qualitative studies. This phenomenon drew our attention to the concern of how qualitative research can inform policy and practice in view of a general sentiment that the policy process tends to prefer quantitative studies. Thus, we organized a roundtable meeting for 12 of MBC's qualitative researchers. The meeting successfully connected the qualitative researchers and initiated a discussion on how to connect qualitative research with the policy process. Following this meeting, Miu Yan organized a roundtable entitled "Qualitative Research: Enhancing the Potential of a Useful Tool in Policy – Relevant Research" at the Metropolis conference held in Calgary. Altogether more than 20 participants attended this roundtable. A verbatim transcript of the roundtable was disseminated among all the attendees, MBC qualitative researchers and the interested parties.

The domain also organized a policy symposium on refugee settlement issues on October 2, 2009. More than fifty researchers, policy and program practitioners attended the symposium to share and discuss issues of housing, mental health and innovative programming and practice for refugees. Over the past year, MBC worked with MITACS/Accelerate BC in creating three internships through which graduate students worked on research initiated by public sector and non-governmental organizations (including the BC Attorney General, SUCCESS and AMSSA). To establish a closer partnership with the NGOs, this year some members of this domain had attended the annual regional meetings of AMSSA. Through the dialogical process between the researchers and settlement service practitioners, a list of research needs was compiled which will be tabled for discussion in the 2009/2010 MBC retreat.

Over the last twelve months the Domain Leader has taken part in many activities relevant to the research priorities of the domain. To support the idea of regionalization, the domain Leader also attended and presented research information of welcoming communities in a CIHR Scientific Café (organized by one of the research fellows of the domain at Thompson River University). As a member of the Research Advisory Committee, Miu Yan has kept an active role in formulating the research agenda of the Welcoming and Inclusive Community and Workplace Project initiated and led by the Ministry of Advanced Education and Labour Market Development Immigrant Integration Branch.

Domain	Settlement, Integration and Welcoming Communities
Project title	Settlement Experiences in a Small City: A Joint Research Partnership between Thompson Rivers University and Kamloops Immigrant Services
Principal investigator, Affiliation	Julie Drolet, School of Social Work and Human Service, Thompson Rivers University
Co-investigators, Affiliation	Jeanette Robertson (TRU)
Specific project-level research objectives	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • To better understand the role of health, education, employment, language, housing and social services in the settlement experiences of immigrants coming through family reunion intake class. • To understand how family-class immigrants identify their settlement needs within a small city. • To determine what supports family-class immigrants require in facilitating their settlement experiences. • To understand how do we enhance existing settlement programs, particularly to meet labour market and language needs. To identify “best practices” in settlement and integration in a small city.

Domain	Housing and Neighbourhoods
Project title	Housing Cost-Burdens: Immigrant Families in BC
Principal investigator, Affiliation	Barry Edmonston, Department of Sociology, University of Victoria
Co-investigators, Affiliation	Sharon Lee, Zheng Wu (UVic)
Specific project-level research objectives	The main objectives of this research are (a) use the most recent census data to provide estimates of housing cost burdens for immigrant households in British Columbia communities and (b) compare housing cost burdens for immigrant and Canada-born households, taking into account factors that influence housing cost burdens.

Domain	Economic and Labour Market Integration
Project title	Temporary Foreign Worker Flows & Canadian Labour Market
Principal investigator, Affiliation	Dominique Gross, Graduate Public Policy Program, Simon Fraser University
Co-investigators, Affiliation	Nicolas Schmitt
Specific project-level research objectives	Evaluate whether addressing the shortage of labour with short-term solutions (i.e. expanding temporary foreign worker programme) is not generating unwarranted adverse long term effects for resident workers.

Domain	Housing and Neighbourhoods
Project title	The socio-spatial outcomes of immigration to BC
Principal investigator, Affiliation	Daniel Hiebert, Geography, University of British Columbia
Co-investigators, Affiliation
Specific project-level research objectives	To examine the major socio-spatial outcomes of immigration to British Columbia generally, and Metropolitan Vancouver in particular. This will be achieved through updating the atlases of immigrant settlement in Greater Vancouver (expanded to British Columbia, in keeping with the new mandate of the Centre). Also, studies looking at the broad economic consequences of immigration to Metro Vancouver (focusing particularly on the issue of admission classes) will be replicated using new IMDB data.

Principal investigator, Affiliation	Margaret Walton-Roberts, Department of Geography and Environmental Studies, Wilfred Laurier University
Co-investigators, Affiliation
Specific project-level research objectives	1. Compare and contrast how Canada and Australia utilize their “ethnic resources” in developing Indian trade relations 2. Explore how the nature of Indian immigration, the immigration policy and labour market context informs this wider trade context. 3. Examine the role played by transnational immigrants in building international trade relations within each national context.

Project title	Labour Market Outcomes of Immigrants and Visible Minorities: The Role of Employers
Principal investigator, Affiliation	Simon Woodcock, Department of Economics, Simon Fraser University
Co-investigators, Affiliation
Specific project-level research objectives	The proposed research addresses one of Metropolis BC’s urgent research questions: what is the role of employers in determining the labour market outcomes of immigrants and visible minorities? (This is urgent question #2 in the Economic and Labour Market Integration Domain.) We will address this broad question by answering two specific questions. 1. We know that immigrants and visible minorities often earn lower wages than comparable native-born majority workers. We also know that high-wage jobs are concentrated in high-wage firms. Therefore, do immigrants and visible minority workers earn relatively low wages because they are concentrated in employment at low-wage firms? Or because they are concentrated in low-wage jobs within firms? 2. Many firms have employment policies (e.g., pay equity, employment equity, or minority recruitment programs) that directly target the employment outcomes of immigrants and visible minorities. Are these policies effective at mitigating wage disparity faced by immigrants and visible minorities?

Project title	Civic & Political Participation of Immigrant Workers: case study
Principal investigator, Affiliation	Jennifer Chun, Department of Sociology, University of British Columbia
Co-investigators, Affiliation
Specific project-level research objectives	Investigate how and under what conditions immigrant workers employed on the bottom rungs of the urban labour market are becoming central political actors in shaping social and economic policy by answering 3 main questions: 1) how are disadvantaged groups of workers, the majority of whom are immigrant women from the Philippines, India, China, Iran and other countries, overcoming multiple barriers to grassroots political activity, including long working hours, primary household responsibilities, limited English language capacity and political disenfranchisement? 2) To what extent does the trans- and multi-national context of immigrant women's lives, including their economic contribution to support family members outside Canada and their past experiences with politics, shape their understandings of leadership, community and social justice? 3) How is the active participation and leadership of immigrant women workers redefining the priorities and activities of labour unions, faith-based groups, and multi-cultural organizations?

Specific project-level research objectives	How do diaspora communities shape contemporary experiences of immigration and integration? What is the relevance of these to citizenship and immigration policy? Specifically, we ask: how do minority evangelical Christian churches integrate immigrants and their children, born in Canada or elsewhere? How do regular inter-generational interactions, or the lack of it, in these churches influence youth's ethnolinguistic, religious, and national identities, and with what implications for settlement policies?

Principal investigator, Affiliation	Alexia Bloch, Department of Anthropology, University of British Columbia
Co-investigators, Affiliation
Specific project-level research objectives	The research considers the ways Russian-speaking immigrants experience civic engagement in their first ten years in Canada and seeks to answer three related questions: How do immigrants who share a language and socio-political history, but not necessarily ethnic belonging, interact in their new country of Canada? What are the spaces, institutions, and cultural organizations that draw people together or create new forms of division in this linguistic community? Finally, what mechanisms could foster a greater sense of civic and political engagement among immigrants from the former Soviet Union living in the greater Vancouver area?

Project title	Diaspora Strategies of the PRC and Its Impact on Chinese Migrants In Canada
Principal investigator, Affiliation	David Ley, Department of Geography, University of British Columbia
Co-investigators, Affiliation	Elaine Ho, Department of Geography, University of British Columbia
Specific project-level research objectives	This project investigates, first, the contemporary diaspora strategies of the Chinese state, including the participation of migrants in mainland Chinese diaspora organisations in Canada. What are the economic, political and cultural impetuses triggering such sending state initiatives? Second, the project will compare the citizenship attitudes of highly skilled Chinese migrants presently in Canada with those who have returned to China.

Principal investigator, Affiliation	Anita Palepu, Centre for Health Evaluation and Outcome Sciences, St. Paul's Hospital, University of British Columbia
Co-investigators, Affiliation
Specific project-level research objectives	The specific research questions of this study are: (1) What is the incidence of housing transitions in the immigrant population?; (2) What are the risk factors, and individual, interpersonal, and community-level resources associated with (a) the attainment of stable housing among homeless immigrants, and (b) the onset of homelessness among vulnerably housed immigrants; and (3) Are changes in housing status associated with subsequent changes in physical and mental health functioning, access to health care, substance use, quality of life, and social support?

Project title	International Perspectives on the Economics of International Migration
Principal investigator, Affiliation	Krishna Pendakur, Economics, Simon Fraser University
Co-investigators, Affiliation	Christian Dustmann
Specific project-level research objectives	This dissemination proposal is to fund (jointly with the Government of BC) a conference entitled "International Perspectives on the Economics of International Migration". The conference will have two special themes: (1)

	Temporary Migration; and (2) the Children of Immigrants. It will be an opportunity to bring together the best academic researchers from around the world to share their current research findings. The conference will be held in Vancouver and will have four distinct purposes. First, as an academic research conference, it will help move forward our research agendas in these areas. Second, by bringing together policy-makers and academic researchers, we give policy-makers access to current research debates. Third, by bringing together policy-makers and academic researchers, we give academics the opportunity to add policy-relevance to their research. Fourth, this conference will allow MBC to invigorate and improve the stature and productivity of its Economics domain.

Domain	Economic and Labour Market Integration
Project title	Immigrant Class, Social Networks and Economic Integration Across Canadian

	Provinces
Principal investigator, Affiliation	Marc-David Seidel, Sauder School of Business, University of British Columbia
Co-investigators, Affiliation	Wendy Roth
Specific project-level research objectives	The role that latent social networks play in determining labour market outcomes is critical to understanding immigrant integration. Social ties often prove an important means for immigrants to find employment in their host society. Yet latent differences in friendship networks of various demographic groups can lead to discriminatory outcomes in the employment relationship, hindering successful integration of newcomers to Canada. The role of social networks in facilitating economic integration has relevance for different classes of immigrants, as sponsored immigrants by definition have sources of social support which other classes of immigrants may not have. In this program of study, we will examine whether immigrants who are sponsored by family members already in Canada achieve greater labour market outcomes than immigrants lacking this source of social support, and how their social networks with other members of their ethnic group differ from those of other immigrants. We plan to further explore the relationships for immigrants between social networks, race, sex, and employment outcomes in different provinces. Previous work has shown that differing ethnic network portfolios can lead to differential integration success within specific demographic groups (Seidel, Barsness, Lo, and Wong 2008), but few have examined how these experiences may differ across provincial or geographical contexts. Using the Longitudinal Survey of Immigrants to Canada (LSIC), we will attempt to shed light on the role social network factors play in successful economic integration for immigrants to Canada.

Project title	Sharing Knowledge: Settlement Experiences in a Small City

Principal investigator, Affiliation	Julie Drolet, School of Social Work and Human Service, Thompson Rivers University
Co-investigators, Affiliation	Jeanette Robertson, Thompson Rivers University
Specific project-level research objectives	The proposed project aims to disseminate research findings from a Metropolis BC funded project titled “Settlement experiences in a small city” and translate results into policy-research priority implications. The importance of sharing the research findings lies in the settlement challenges faced by smaller communities outside of the major metropolitan areas of Canada. It is imperative to better understand the settlement experience of family-class immigrants in a small city. All immigrant groups rely on health, education and other social services, and social workers play a key role in the delivery of direct and essential services. This study has generated discussion and policy implications for government, practitioners, policy-makers and other stakeholders around issues such as needs and settlement experiences of immigrants, ethno-specific groups, credentials recognition and other labour market issues, and capacity issues for delivering key services in a smaller community. This applied social research project was undertaken by a research team comprised of social work faculty (TRU), community-based partners (Kamloops Immigrant Services), and practitioners (Interior Health Authority) as well as a student research assistant. Qualitative research methods included focused roundtable discussions, interviews, photovoice, and documentation. The research team would like to disseminate the research findings by translating policy-research priority implications, and develop a questionnaire for settlement workers in small cities (Vernon and Prince George).

Principal investigator, Affiliation	Scott Graham, Social Planning and Research Council of BC (SPARC BC)
Co-investigators, Affiliation	Robyn Newton and Karli Brotchie, Social Planning and Research Council of BC (SPARC BC)
Specific project-level research objectives	The overarching objectives of the project are to: 1. Synthesize relevant Metropolis research into a series of fact sheets; 2. Engage relevant stakeholders in two workshops that are centered on practical questions about the results of Metropolis research; 3. Identify new areas of inquiry for the Metropolis framework for research in the area of Citizenship and Social, Cultural and Civic Integration, especially research that would benefit practitioners in immigrant and multicultural service agencies; 4. Produce a workshop summary report that analyzes participant responses and advances recommendations for new areas of inquiry.

Project title	On-line Access Project – MBC Settlement Research Outcomes
Principal investigator, Affiliation	Tim Welsh, Affiliation of Multicultural Societies and Service Agencies of BC (AMSSA)
Co-investigators, Affiliation	Kathy Sherrell, Department of Geography, University of British Columbia
Specific project-level research objectives	A specialized web-site will be developed with “wiki” interactive elements to ease access to Metropolis BC and related research outcomes relevant for immigrant settlement and government frontline staffs. A senior MBC student will be engaged and a representative group of intended primary users will be consulted to develop the site structure and content. Existing or newly-developed summaries of MBC research of relevance to settlement service provision will form the basis for this project. An original web site (hosted by AMSSA, publicly accessible) will be designed that opens as a “discussion” about general settlement topics (eg: housing, health, employment). For each settlement topic there will be another layer with more in-depth

	analysis of how MBC research findings interrelate. Summaries of individual MBC working papers will provide a third layer of information, and will include links to where full research reports are hosted on the Metropolis web site. Other sites with relevant research, including other Canadian Metropolis Centres, will be also be identified, though the scope of this project will not permit development and incorporation of research summaries for non-MBC research. AMSSA's provincial membership of immigrant service agencies, as well as our governmental service partners, will guide development of this new online resource, ensuring it is effectively developed for the information needs and time limitation of frontline workers in the public and non-profit sectors. Project title	Refugee Exclusions in Canada: 2002-2008
Principal investigator, Affiliation	Catherine Dauvergne, Faculty of Law, University of British Columbia
Co-investigators, Affiliation
Specific project-level research objectives	This project will investigate patterns of refugee exclusions in Canada from 2002 to 2008. The working hypothesis is that 'exclusions' from refugee protection have increased in the post September 11 security climate (Dauvergne, 2006; Kelley, 2007). This trend has not yet been systematically investigated in Canada. This research will document the extent of the trend towards rising rates of exclusion and it will examine the basis for those exclusions both quantitatively and qualitatively. The central research questions are: who is being excluded from refugee protection and on what bases? People can be excluded from refugee protection in Canada at two junctures in the process. The first is at an eligibility screen, conducted either by the CBSA or CIC. The second is as part of a refugee determination before the Refugee Protection Division of the Immigration and Refugee Board. The grounds for exclusion at the eligibility phase include security issues, protection elsewhere and previous claims. The grounds for exclusion by the RPD are those set out in the international Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees. These two points of exclusion will be investigated and compared. The data will be scrutinized for patterns related to country of origin, religious background, gender and age. This will allow conclusions regarding whether the September 11, 2001 security climate has led to increased exclusions of young Muslim men.

Project title	School Choice and Integration: Evidence from British Columbia
Principal investigator, Affiliation	Jane Friesen, Department of Economics, Simon Fraser University
Co-investigators, Affiliation
Specific project-level research objectives	The substantial ethnic and linguistic segregation of residential neighborhoods in B.C.'s Lower Mainland is reflected in the composition of neighborhood schools. However, the link between neighborhood and school sorting is weakened when students choose to attend schools other than their neighborhood or "catchment area" public school. These school choice decisions may exacerbate or mitigate school-level segregation, depending on the characteristics of schools chosen relative to neighborhood schools. Consequently, policies that increase opportunities for school choice may affect school-level segregation. Our first goal is to examine the effect of school choice policies on the school-level segregation of students by home language and aboriginal identity. Specifically, we will investigate the role of the private school system, magnet programs, and the introduction 2003 of "open boundaries" for public schools, in shaping school-level segregation. School choice decisions may affect segregation even if students do not purposely avoid out-group members if, for example, students seek schools with high achieving peers and achievement is correlated with home language and aboriginal identity. Therefore our second goal is to measure the extent to which school choice is directly influenced by the linguistic characteristics and aboriginal identity of school peers. We will measure how parents' school choice decisions are influenced by school composition, conditional on school-level achievement.

Project title	Investigating Immigrant and Non-Immigrant Businesses in Kelowna
Principal investigator, Affiliation	Lucia Lo, Department of Geography, York University
Co-investigators, Affiliation	Carlos Teixeira, Community, Culture and Global Studies, UBC Okanagan
Specific project-level research objectives	With immigration projected to account for all population and labor force growth in Canada by 2031 (Statistics Canada 2006), second- and third-tier cities are facing pressure to attract immigrants to counter population ageing trends and boost economic productivity. Known as a retirement community and facing huge labour shortage, Kelowna has been active in recruiting skilled labor and small- and medium-size businesses (EDC 2008). Although provincial nominees increased from 36 in 2005 to 120 in 2007, and business establishments increased by 10% between December 2004 and June 2008, a challenge remains: how to retain and integrate the new immigrants which stood at about 10% of the 23,720 immigrants in the Kelowna CMA in the 2006 census. As a pilot study, this proposed research aims to compare businesses owned and operated by immigrants and those belonging to the Canadian-born in Kelowna. We will examine the socio-demographic characteristics of Kelowna's entrepreneurs, the opportunities and challenges facing them, and their coping strategies. In particular, we will explore their perspectives on recruiting and retaining immigrant workers, the barriers they encounter in hiring and supporting the integration of newcomers into Kelowna's labor market, and the strategies they use to resolve labor shortage problems. In addition, we want to know if immigrant firms substitute or complement businesses owned and operated by Canadian-born employers. Drawing on the findings, we aim to suggest policy plans that can remedy any identified issues.

Project title	Integrating Newcomers as an Urban Practice: The Case of Greater Victoria
Principal investigator, Affiliation	Oliver Schmidtke, Department of Political Science, University of Victoria
Co-investigators, Affiliation	Inter-Cultural Association of Greater Victoria
Specific project-level research objectives	One of the key questions in immigration research is how the general commitment to making our communities more welcoming and inclusive can drive and promote effective integration policies and practices. This project will focus on the urban context of Greater Victoria and analyze how the ‘welcoming communities’ initiative as a priority of the provincial government has been taken up by stakeholders in the community. The project’s central research questions are: How does the general commitment to recognizing diversity and protecting claims of immigrants and minorities turn into initiatives, policies and institutional change in Greater Victoria? What is the process of forming such policies and practices? What are the main arenas for political participation and institutional change? To what degree and in what form are the main stakeholders involved in the political process and what are productive forms of partnership between community groups and government authorities at the municipal and provincial level? The research will be conducted in close collaboration with the Inter-Cultural Association of Greater Victoria and its current attempt to come up with a strategic action plan for making the city more welcoming and inclusive to newcomers. It will study strategies of communal outreach with view to the opportunities and constraints to engage groups from different sectors of civil society and government representatives in deliberating options for making Victoria a more 'welcoming community'. A series of interviews and focus groups will allow highlighting best practices in this field and conceptualizing the urban context as a decisive arena for integrating newcomers.

Project title	Sense of Belonging of Immigrants and Their Children in Canada's Urban Neighborhoods
Principal investigator, Affiliation	Zheng Wu, Department of Sociology, University of Victoria
Co-investigators, Affiliation
Specific project-level research objectives	This project will utilize a large sample of Canadians nested within several thousand urban neighborhoods to determine whether immigrant status influences sense of belonging to Canada and to individual ethnic groups. The literature indicates the conventional definition of immigration is problematic because it conflates individuals that immigrated at different life stages. Recent theories on patterns of immigrant adaptation suggest that lumping these generational cohorts of immigrants together could conceal important differences in their propensities and abilities to integrate into their receiving communities. Hence, this project will redefine immigrants in more nuanced terms in order to investigate the relationship between age at immigration (life stage) and differences in sense of belonging. Do immigrants develop a sense of belonging to Canada that is as strong or stronger as their cultural origins? What are the implications of age at immigration for sense of belonging to Canada? Are there differences in sense of belonging to one's own ethnic or cultural group between generational cohorts of immigrants? In addition, this project will determine whether place of settlement mediates these relationships, paying close attention to the contextual effects of neighborhood-level attributes, such as ethnic diversity, racial segregation and concentration of low-income households. Does neighborhood-level ethnic diversity foster a stronger sense of belonging to Canada inasmuch as it reflects the ideals of multiculturalism? What is the relationship between ethnic diversity and sense of belonging to particular ethnic groups? Does the concentration (segregation) of racial minorities represent a pattern of social isolation that weakens sense of belonging to Canada?

Project title	Assessment for Intimate Partner Violence in the Perinatal Period: When, Where and What Next?
Principal investigator, Affiliation	Patricia Janssen, School of Population & Public Health, University of British Columbia
Co-investigators, Affiliation	Sarah Desmarais, School of Population & Public Health, University of British Columbia
Specific project-level research objectives	Couples new to Canada have few support networks and may be facing unemployment or underemployment. This, in combination with being isolated by language and culture creates vulnerability and isolation, which in turn increases the risk for intimate partner violence. Violence perpetuated by an intimate partner is increasingly recognized as an important determinant of health among women. The risk of a Canadian woman's lifetime exposure to violence from her intimate partner is 25%, but the risk among women of Chinese descent is unknown. Pregnancy offers a unique opportunity to screen for intimate partner violence because it brings otherwise healthy women into contact with health care providers. The best time during the perinatal period (pregnancy, childbirth, or postpartum) to respond to questions about violence, from a woman's perspective, is unknown. As well, controversy exists about screening, as few interventions have been tested for their effectiveness in improving women's safety. In the current study we will evaluate disclosure rates among women attending maternity care services at Richmond General Hospital during the prenatal period, hospitalization for delivery and a postpartum home visit, as a function of ethnic background and immigration status. Approximately 50% of women in this population are of Chinese descent and are immigrants or first or second generation Canadians. We will interview women who disclose violence to learn about the factors that facilitated or discouraged disclosure, and explore with them acceptable and feasible strategies that they can adopt within their community to enhance safety.

Project title	Media Representation of Immigrants in the Canadian Criminal Justice System
Principal investigator, Affiliation	Wendy Chan, Department of Sociology, Simon Fraser University
Co-investigators, Affiliation
Specific project-level research objectives	This project critically examines how the print news media represents immigrants in the Canadian justice system. Media representations of immigrants significantly impact public perception about immigration issues and subsequent policy development. They play a central role in not just shaping public opinion, but as van Dijk (1993) notes, influencing corporate, academic and social elites as well. With a contentious issue such as immigration, where the stakes are high for various groups, media depictions may be crucial in shaping the way the public forms policy preferences. Furthermore, news stories about immigrants involved in the criminal justice system tend to evoke passionate views by the public on issues of culpability. Yet despite its influence, there has not been, to date, a comprehensive study of how immigrants in the criminal justice system are represented in Canada. This proposed project will involve an examination of newspaper articles drawn from three news databases (CBCA Newstand, BC Index and Globe and Mail archives) over a 15 year period (1990-2005) to discover how public understanding of immigrants has been shaped by national and regional papers. Few immigration topics are as controversial as those involving immigrants in the criminal justice system.

	Misunderstanding and stereotyping are common reactions. Understanding the role that the news media plays in shaping our views of immigrants is central to developing policies and practices that allow for a fair and balanced view of immigrants in Canada.

The Regionalization of Immigrant Settlement in Canada: The Attraction-Retention of New Immigrants:

DATE: May 15, 2008

TARGET AUDIENCE: Academic and non-academic

ATTENDEES: 73 in total. 8 Faculty, 37 Graduate students, 3 Provincial Government, 4 Federal Government, 2 Municipal Government, 18 NGO, and 1 immigrant

LOCATION: UBC Okanagan, Kelowna

DURATION: 9:00am – 4:30pm

COST: No Fees, free of charge

WEBSITE:

ABSTRACT: Immigration to Canada has been recognized as an essential element in demographic development and economic growth. While all levels of government—in conjunction with community organizations, NGOs, Chambers of Commerce and the private sector more generally—have introduced policies and programs to support the regional distribution of new immigrants across the country, results show that small urban centres and rural communities continue to face attraction and retention challenges for newcomers. In this context, the Symposium was both a forum to present innovative work in this field and an opportunity for open and critical engagement on the subject of welcoming communities. This symposium drew upon the participation of academics, government policy makers from different levels, NGOs, and other interested parties.

Refugee Integration and Health:

DATE: November 7, 2008

TARGET AUDIENCE: Academic and non-academic

ATTENDEES: 55 in total. 6 Faculty, 4 Graduate students, 8 Provincial Government, 1 Federal Government, 2 Municipal Government, 21 NGO, 3 Vancouver Health Authority and remainder unknown

LOCATION: SFU Harbour Centre

DURATION: 9:00am – 4:00pm

COST: No Fees, free of charge

WEBSITE:

ABSTRACT: Several topics were discussed. The subject of the first panel was finding a 'home' in Metro Vancouver – refugees, housing and income security. Panel two discussed the intersections of health and home – issues of health influencing refugee integration. Finally, new directions and approaches were the subject of the third panel. More specifically, what is the most important gap faced with respect to the provision of services to GARs? What are some of the challenges and initial learnings?

Brown Bag Seminar

Skilled Migration with Richard Bedford:

DATE: August 7, 2008

TARGET AUDIENCE: Academic

ATTENDEES: 11 in total. 4 Faculty, 3 Graduate students, 1 Post-doctoral student, 2 Provincial government and 1 NGO

LOCATION: UBC Liu Centre

DURATION:

COST: No Fees, free of charge

WEBSITE:

ABSTRACT: This seminar reviewed recent developments in the global and local contexts within which New Zealand's policies to attract, select and retain skilled migrants are situated. Three themes are considered: (1) Shifts in patterns of demand for and supply of skilled migrants; (2) Recent trends in migration to and from New Zealand; and (3) Emerging issues relating to the definition of "skill" in ageing populations.

MBC Annual Research Retreat:

DATE: September 26, 2008

TARGET AUDIENCE: Academic

ATTENDEES: 42 in total. 3 NGO, 18 Academic, 11 Provincial Government, 5 Federal Government, 3 Graduate students, 2 MBC staff

LOCATION: SFU Harbour Centre

DURATION: 8:30am – 4:00pm

COST: No Fees, free of charge

WEBSITE: <http://www.riim.metropolis.net/knowledge/>

ABSTRACT: The retreat was organized with two thematically-based discussion panels in the morning, with domain discussions and a final summary discussion in the afternoon.

The first panel focused on policy and practical initiatives at the local level, and the second on policy initiatives and research needs at the Federal-Provincial level. Presenters in the panels were given 15 minutes each, followed by general discussion.

The Global Migration of Philippine-Trained Nurses: Causes, Impacts and Future Prospects:

DATE: November 6, 2008

TARGET AUDIENCE: Academic and non-academic

ATTENDEES: Approximately 10 in total.

LOCATION: UBC Liu Institute

DURATION: 4:00pm – 5:30pm

COST: No Fees, free of charge

WEBSITE:

ABSTRACT: This public lecture examined the current global migration of Filipino nurses within the context of the Philippine health situation and neo-liberal globalization. It analyzed the various push and pull factors of migration, and how such factors have affected the current health situation of the Philippines. The current perspective of “ethical recruitment”, espoused by the current Philippine and Canadian agreement in the recruitment of Filipino nurses to Canada, was discussed. Future scenarios and the impacts of global migration were also explored.

LEVERAGE

MBC has been very successful in raising external funding. In particular, the Province of British Columbia through the Ministry of the Attorney General has committed $500,000 ($100,000 per year) to our core budget. In addition, through joint funding of research projects, MITACS has committed $150,000 ($30,000 per year) to Metropolis sponsored research internships. These research internships each have matching external funding from the intern sponsor, usually a government agency or private firm, yielding an additional $150,000 ($30,000 per year) in external funding. Finally, in Years 1 and 2 of Phase III, we have jointly funded research projects awarded through our competition process with the Asia Pacific Foundation (APF). For this, APF has committed $60,000 ($30,000 per year for Years 1 and 2). Consequently, our total externally leveraged funds amount to $860,000 for the 5 years of Phase III.

2007-08:	$190,000
2008-09:	$190,000
2009-10:	$160,000
2010-11:	$160,000
2011-12:	$160,000

In addition to these external resources, MBC has substantial financial commitments from its university partners, Simon Fraser University, the University of British Columbia and the University of Victoria. SFU has committed $52,000 per year in cash plus $30,000 (3 courses) per year in release time stipends for its Co-Director and Domain Leader. UBC has committed $22,000 per year in cash plus $50,000 (5 courses) per year in release time stipends for its Co-Director and Domain Leaders. UVic has committed $5,000 per year in cash plus $10,000 (1 course) per year for its Domain Leader. This totals $167,000 per year, yielding $845,000 over the 5 years of Phase III.
